Exciting things are going on at the Liberty Dayton Regional Medical Center in preparation for their new MRI machine. If you drove by the hospital on North Travis in Liberty this past week, this big excavator was digging nearby in order to conduct a soil test. The soil test was necessary to make sure the sandy soil of Liberty was going to be stable underneath this massive, heavy machine. Coming up next will be a substantial concrete slab capable of supporting the MRI machine. An unexpected surprise popped up when the workers discovered a long-forgotten water line, likely dating back to when Yettie Kersting Memorial Hospital was first built.
