Mother-daughter costumes of several years ago [early 1960s] look quite different from today's mini skirts. Even the kiddies had longer dresses than many older ladies nowadays. L-R: Leslie and Bettie Bell; Lisa, Traci and Geneva Reidland; Jodie and Jo Ann Casey, and Dana and Betty Holbrook.

First Baptist Church of Liberty looked like this before the remodeling and expansion work, which was done nearly a decade ago. This is the way many remember it, including this editor and his wife [Wiley and Edith Smith], who were married in it while Rev. L.L. Richardson was pastor, as can be seen on the church bulletin out front.

1912 photograph of Dayton was made from about the site of the present junior high school building [current location of Dayton post office] looking due north toward the main business area. Rio Theater can just be seen over the roof of the frame house at far left. That frame house is about on the site of Dayton State Bank. The street running from right to the middle of the buildings at left is Main Street.
